Mundelein reborn
Our world is a changing one.

As we look at the world that our present students will inherit, we know that they will live in communities and participate in workplaces that are increasingly a mix of cultures, races, creeds, and values. We can see that technology will offer more and more information, and perhaps less and less analysis. We can envision a furthering of environmental degradation and depletion of the planet’s resources. And we anticipate that growing financial and educational gaps between and among different constituents in our societies will lead to even more political and social strife and upheaval around our worlds.

Fundamentally, all education is about preparing students for their own future. It is about helping them become critical thinkers who can absorb and create new knowledge. It is about giving them the skills to lead and serve in the world they’re going to inhabit—in a world that will need their leadership.

When Jesuits started educating children 450 years ago in Messina, Sicily, it was at the request of the town’s merchant class. They wanted their sons to take over the management not only of their companies but of their city. So the Jesuits devised an educational program, which has been reformed and fine-tuned since that time, to prepare people to be not just merchants, or whatever their parents were, but to become ethical leaders with a passion for service in their communities. It is, of course, necessary to have the best training possible in one’s discipline or career area. But a Loyola education, rooted in Ignatian pedagogy, is based on the belief that learning is not limited to the disembodied mind but happens through the experience of the particular—places, faces, cultures, contexts, and problems—and through the movement of our hearts as well, the affective dimension of our lives. This is well-recognized here as an essential ingredient in a well-rounded, engaged education.

We hear a lot about whether, in this economic climate, a college degree is worth the financial investment required to gain it. Research shows time and again that the lifetime value of a college degree is well worth the cost. At Loyola, we see the fruits of our efforts in the lives of our graduates who go on to serve as women and men for others.

For more on the value of a Loyola education, please see page 8 in this magazine.

QUINLAN SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

New centers meet University and city-wide need

In November, the Quinlan School of Business announced the launch of the city’s first and only Supply and Value Chain Center. The center fills a critical gap for Chicago as an international hub for transportation, distribution, and logistics.

December saw the launch of the Raymond C. Baumhart, S.J., Center for Social Enterprise and Responsibility, thanks to the $5 million gift the Quinlan School of Business received last year.

The Baumhart Center will build on Loyola’s strength in ethics, marrying the Jesuit mission of being “people for others” with the business ethos of acting from self-interest. The center will facilitate debates about the moral foundations and practical merits of the free enterprise system while helping organizations assess the efficacy of their community outreach efforts.

“No other educational institute in the area specializes in supply and value chain research, education, and practice.”

MARCELLA NIEHOFF SCHOOL OF NURSING

New building fosters collaboration

The new Marcella Niehoff School of Nursing opened this fall on the Health Sciences Campus. The building, located adjacent to the Stritch School of Medicine, features classrooms and administrative space as well as collaborative learning space for both nursing and medical students. It also includes a virtual information commons; a clinical simulation lab including a six-bed virtual hospital; and a simulated home-care environment. The building is LEED-certified.

The Wonders of Creation and the Role of Science, a mosaic by Melville P. Steinfelds that was originally displayed at Lake Shore Campus’s Damen Hall, was moved to the new Marcella Niehoff School of Nursing building, with sections by artist David Lee Csicsko added to accommodate its new setting.

The new Marcella Niehoff School of Nursing building, features state-of-the-art technology in simulation, labs as well as traditional lecture halls.
Loyola has received a grant from the U.S. State Department to fund scholarships for underrepresented students to attend the VIETNAM CENTER. The grant is especially geared toward the study of environmental sciences and provides for Loyola to bring Vietnamese environmental scientists to Chicago for workshops on developing courses in the same area.

SUSTAINABILITY

Feeding the future

As the national population of farmers ages, the U.S. Department of Agriculture is focused on developing a pipeline of new people trained in innovative and sustainable practices for entry into the food sector. In response, Loyola is developing an interdisciplinary and comprehensive Food Systems program. Students will learn about plant and soil science, integrated pest management, water conservation practices, and the science and practice of growing food, as well as marketing, packing, and selling.

Courses will also cover policy, such as Public Health Department and USDA inspections, licensing, government regulations, and the Farm Bill, as well as the public health aspects of food systems, such as nutrition, obesity, and diabetes. This is one of several academic programs being developed in the new Institute of Environmental Sustainability.

RETREAT AND ECOLOGY CAMPUS

HARVEST FESTIVAL • In late September, the Loyola community celebrated its second annual Harvest Festival at the Retreat and Ecology Campus, which reinforces the campus’s mission to serve as a place for spiritual and intellectual growth and dedication to ecological sustainability. Over 650 festival-goers browsed a mini-farmers market, warmed up by a bonfire; lent a hand with the harvest from the local garden, participated in a wetland-restoration workshop, and enjoyed live music.

STRICTH SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

Stritch Award Dinner

The Stritch School of Medicine honored outstanding individuals and raised scholarship money at its 62nd Annual Award Dinner on Nov. 17, 2012, at the Field Museum.

- Dr. Katherine Walsh (BS ’66, MD ‘80) received the Stritch Medal for inspiring leadership, contributions to medical education, and commitment to patient-centered care.
- Jazz great Ramsey Lewis received the Sword of Loyola for his dedication to cultivating upcoming and struggling artists.
- Teresa Wronski (BS ’75), associate dean, Student Affairs, won the Dux Mirabilis Award for extraordinary leadership.

MIRRORS OF THE SAINTS
The Jesuit Wierix Collection from De Krijtberg in Amsterdam
THROUGH JANUARY 13, 2013
Collections of prints depicting the spiritual fortitude of saints were known as “mirrors” in late medieval and early modern Europe. This exhibition comprises 50 copperplates executed by a family of 17th-century Flemish printmakers: Antoon and Hieronymous Wierix and their brother-in-law, Jan Baptist Barbé. The plates were discovered in the possession of the Amsterdam Jesuits in 2000. New prints that were struck from the old plates will also be on view.

A college degree is worth it

“College is about preparing students for their future, for helping them learn how to solve life’s challenges, for making them better citizens of the world. What could be more valuable than that?”

—MICHAEL J. GARANZINI, S.J.
LOYOLA PRESIDENT AND CEO

It’s hard to open (or click on) a newspaper without reading about the rising cost of tuition. Graduates do have increasingly high debt loads and are entering a less-than-ideal job market. But research shows that a college degree, costly as it is, is worth the investment: financially, in quality of life, and in contributions to society.

Even after factoring in the cost of higher education, the typical college graduate will earn $500,000 more over his or her lifetime than someone without a degree. College graduates also live longer, are happier in their jobs, and are far more likely to vote and volunteer. They are more likely to have employer-sponsored retirement plans and health benefits, and they’re far less likely to depend on public assistance or live in poverty.

Loyola wants to make sure that promising students have access to the benefits that a college education provides, regardless of their family’s financial situation. That’s why the university awarded over $121 million in financial aid in 2011, and it’s why the new scholarship campaign is so important.

IGNATIAN HERITAGE MONTH

A time to learn and reflect

Throughout November, the Loyola community celebrated Ignatian Heritage Month, honoring Loyola’s namesake and the founder of the Jesuit order, St. Ignatius of Loyola. Events included a series of lectures focused on talking to God and the Ignatian philosophy, a day of community service, a prayer vigil focused on the Salvadoran martyrs, and a panel discussion about the role of women in Jesuit education.

Hunger Week, a part of Ignatian Heritage Month, held November 4-10, focused on education about global hunger. Students and faculty participated in an all-day “Fast-a-thon” and volunteered in soup kitchens. The week closed with the Hunger Run 5K, which sent proceeds to organizations that fight world hunger.

Surrendering a life of chivalry and soldiering for that of service to God, St. Ignatius founded the Society of Jesus in the 16th century. The Jesuits’ long-standing tradition of education remains alive today at Loyola.

CHICAGO’S TOP 100 WORKPLACES

Loyola three-peats in survey

For three years, the Chicago Tribune has published a list of Chicago’s Top 100 Workplaces, and for the third consecutive year, Loyola has been recognized in the large company category. This year, the University is ranked 21st. The Top Workplaces program evaluates organizations based upon feedback from an employee survey, which more than 1,360 faculty and staff members completed a few months ago.

‘Ubuntu’—leadership and others

The African concept of Ubuntu means that in a very real sense we are only human through the humanity of others. Ubuntu is the idea that people are empowered by other people, that we become our best selves through unselfish interactions with others. Ubuntu implies that leadership means being a custodian of others. Ubuntu means that a leader should not let his own will, his own needs, supersede the will and the needs of the community.

Nelson Mandela’s biographer, Richard Stengel, writes that Mandela demonstrated true Ubuntu leadership when campaigning to be the first president of South Africa. This campaign, Mandela argued, was not about him. It was about the people and the democratic nation that they would create together and for each other. But in the end, says Stengel, Mandela’s greatest act of Ubuntu leadership was knowing when to quit. Mandela understood the profoundly selfless truth that leadership cannot and should not be a lifelong office. His commitment to Ubuntu included the principle of both empowering others and knowing when to step down and be replaced by others. One year into his first term, he publically announced that he would not stand for a second term.

For Mandela, Ubuntu leadership was always about service to others. He understood that “his footprints would be the first ones in the sand and that others would follow.” In one of his many interviews with Richard Stengel, Mandela succinctly captured the true spirit of Ubuntu in explaining why he chose to leave the public stage: “Men come and men go. I have come and I will go when my time comes.”

Celebrating 75

The cheerful presence of Sister Jean Dolores Schmidt, BVM, is a constant at Loyola. Sept. 8, 2012, marked Sr. Jean’s 75th anniversary with the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Sr. Jean joined the Loyola community in 1961, and ever since has livened up and inspired Loyola’s campuses in many roles, including her current role as chaplain of the men’s basketball team.

The University held several events to honor Sr. Jean’s commitment to the Sisters of Charity, BVM, and to the Loyola community. Congratulations, Sr. Jean!

Phase III of reimagine, the campaign to transform student life, will be completed in spring 2013 with the opening of the Arnold J. Damen, S.J., Student Center.
How to make stage props

1. Comb through the script several times and make a list of props you think you’ll need. In Illuminating Voices, one play was about the statues in front of Mundelein, and so I knew we’d need wings, halos, and the objects the statues are holding—a book and torch, and a globe with a cross.

2. Research the look and feel you’ll want your props to have. The research for the statue props was as simple as it gets—we stood outside Mundelein and snapped photos.

3. Think about the material qualities you need your props to have. I knew that the material for the wings would have to be something I could carve in order to recreate the stone detail. So I chose a dense pink foam, like the kind you’d use to insulate a house. I drew a pattern, and then traced it onto the foam with a tool called a pounce wheel (which is like a pizza cutter with a toothed wheel). Then I used a hot knife to cut it out of the foam and spackled it.

4. Give your materials the right look. All of the props had to look like they were made out of stone, so I found a textured paint treatment that I painted onto the wings, the book, the torch, the ball, and the wooden cross that we had to attach to the ball. I had students do detailing on highlight and shadow.

5. Always be on the lookout. I’ll walk up and down the aisles at stores looking for things I need, and I’ll very frequently find a solution that way. For the two halos, I had to figure out how to make something that could be mounted to the pedestals the actors were standing on. When I was at the hardware store, I found round heat vents and that’s just what the halos ended up being.

6. Most importantly, be flexible. Things can change through the rehearsal process, and a prop-maker has to adapt. For the globe, they originally wanted it to bounce as part of a visual gag. I bought an inflatable ball and gave it the paint treatment, but the challenge was there’s really no good way to attach a wooden cross to an inflatable ball. We ended up sort of precariously gluing it but, they didn’t end up bouncing it in the show in the end. As a rule, the thing you spent the most time on or that has been the most difficult will get cut. You just have to be able to adapt.

and Performing Arts in a Chicago landmark

By ANASTASIA BUSIEK
enormous stone angels flank the main entrance to the Mundelein Center. They're hard to miss. As generations of students have been keen to recite: one, Uriel, holds the book of wisdom; the other, Jophiel, holds the torch of knowledge and a globe anchored by a cross. They are fitting sentinels of the space they guard. Within the building’s walls, thousands of students have experimented, discovered, learned, and changed.

Once the home of Mundelein College, a private, Roman Catholic women’s college, the building is now the Mundelein Center for the Fine and Performing Arts.

Construction of the Mundelein Center, then known as the Skyscraper Building, began in 1929 as the stock market was crashing and the Roaring Twenties were coming to a close. Built in just 11 months for under $2 million, the building was dedicated in 1931. According to Sr. Ann Ida Gannon, BVM, a former president of the college, the building was familiarly called “Skyscraper” not because of its height (although it was the tallest in the area for several years after its construction), but because of the steel framework and structure that characterize urban skyscrapers. The architecture showcases many attributes of the popular Art Deco style, including strong vertical lines and geometric shapes.

For many years, the building served as a self-contained university for the women of Mundelein College. It housed living spaces, a cafeteria, a gymnasium, a pool, a library, a chapel, an auditorium, and classroom and administrative space. In 1991, the building and college became incorporated into Loyola. The building has been on the National Register of Historic Places since 1980, and it has been an official Chicago landmark since 2007. Loyola began renovating the building in late 2004, and, in fall of 2012, it was rededicated as the Mundelein Center for the Fine and Performing Arts.
THEATRE

Honoring the Newharts

Loyola dedicated the Newhart Family Theatre in recognition of the Newhart family’s many contributions to and friendship with Loyola and Mundelein College. The Newhart family has been part of the Loyola community for more than 60 years.

Bob Newhart graduated from Loyola’s Quinlan School of Business in 1952. His sisters, Sr. Joan Newhart, BVM, Pauline Quan, and Virginia Brittain, graduated from Mundelein College in 1949, 1952, and 1965, respectively.

Bob Newhart’s career as a stand-up comedian began after his discharge from the U.S. Army in 1954. His debut comedy album, “The Button-Down Mind of Bob Newhart” (1960) was a hit and won him two Grammy Awards and led to regular appearances on television and eventually to The Bob Newhart Show, Newhart, and many award-winning albums, television appearances, and film roles.

“When I graduated from Loyola University Chicago in 1952, it would never have occurred to me that one day there would be a Newhart Family theatre on Loyola’s campus,” commented Newhart. “It is a great source of pride and honor for all our families.”

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER

NEXT PAGE A CLOSER LOOK AT THE THEATRE
The Newhart Family Theatre

The Newhart Family Theatre will offer new and exciting opportunities to students involved in theatre at Loyola. The stage is a thrust stage, which means that the audience surrounds the performers on three sides as opposed to a classic proscenium—like Mullady—the previous theatre, in which the audience is situated on one side of the performers, looking into a picture.

“Physically, the new theatre space offers a totally different experience for the audience and performer,” says April Browning, managing director of fine and performing arts. “The thrust space creates an interaction between performers and the audience that is more intimate and dynamic. This change also means different opportunities for scenic, costume, and lighting design and choices of literature. So many of the plays that are written today require a more engaged relationship with the audience, so the experience of working in this theatre is going to be a lot more relevant to what students are going to be doing after they graduate.”

In addition to the new thrust stage, the scenic and costume shops got major upgrades with enough space to use as both teaching labs and workshop spaces.

HIGHLIGHTS

- 215 fixed seats, thrust configuration with proscenium arch.
- State-of-the-art sound, lighting, video, and communication system and custom suspension grid.
- Backstage includes a green room and dressing and changing rooms for up to 30 performers, as well as a make-up room.
- The lower level features a new scenic shop, including a prop shop and painting and welding areas, as well as a costume shop with dye and fitting rooms and storages.
- Also included in the newly renovated spaces are a flexible seating black box theatre called The Underground, a small recital hall on the second floor, a sheet music library, and performance classrooms, studios, and practice rooms for music, theatre, and dance.

The renovations, completed by architects from Baranski Hammer Moretta & Sheehy, were completed from top to bottom. The building’s elevator shaft didn’t originally extend to the top four floors, which served as living quarters for the BVMs. Thus, a major project was to build an elevator that went all the way from the basement to the 14th floor—no small feat.

The biggest renovation challenge came with the construction of the Newhart Family Theatre (see sidebar). In order to clear the space needed for the stage opening, three structural columns had to be cut out. A enormous steel transfer beam now holds up the weight of floors 4–7 that the columns previously supported—a design that won the firm Klein and Hoffman an award for excellence in structural engineering.

Other major features include a multi-purpose room encased in glass and steel, and affectionately called the “Crystal Palace” by those involved in its construction. A greenhouse on the 7th floor was stripped and replaced with new glass.

As wonderful as the facility is, the most important part is that the Department of Fine and Performing Arts can now focus on programming that will be fully supported by the modernization of the space.

“Now that it’s done, it allows us to move into new possibilities for programming,” says April Browning, managing director of fine and performing arts, who has been heavily involved in the renovations since they began in 2004. “We can build new relationships with the community and arts organizations. We have the ability to give the space life as an arts center and hopefully destination spot.”

At the dedication of the Newhart Family Theatre, Sarah Gabel, chairperson for the fine and performing arts, echoed Browning’s sentiments. “Artists can make art anywhere,” Gabel said. “Artists don’t need beautiful, state-of-the-art facilities in which to exercise their creativity. But when we have these spaces, as we now have at Loyola, it inspires us to create works of art we might never have imagined otherwise.”

Out of a presidentially appointed federal commission of 15 experts, three are Loyola alumni—a fact they just recently discovered, despite having worked together for some time. Each is blind or visually impaired, and each is passionate about helping others with disabilities secure quality employment.

James Kesteloot (BS ’67), Karen McCulloh (BS ’94), and James Omvig (JD ’66) all serve on the U.S. AbilityOne Commission, which traces its roots back to a 1938 law stating that, whenever it could, the federal government should purchase products it needed from nonprofit organizations employing people who are blind. The measure has since been amended to add people with severe disabilities and to include services as well as goods. The AbilityOne Commission manages this program.

All three alumni note that the explosion in the growth of elderly Americans is already posing a public policy challenge, as many of these individuals will experience some form of vision loss and other disabling problems. McCulloh says that with an estimated national unemployment rate ranging between 70 and 75 percent among people who are blind and significantly disabled, the need to create new job opportunities is critical to their self-sufficiency and independence, as well as to the well-being of the national economy.

But all three are optimistic about the future and are hopeful that barriers will continue to fall. Citing its program to assist returning veterans who have experienced vision loss while fighting overseas, Omvig says that the AbilityOne Commission has an almost uncanny ability to come up with an innovative program to address a pressing need.

“I think that far too many people still think that because we may be blind or severely disabled, we can’t be productive,” says Omvig, who himself is totally blind. “We know that this is simply not true. All we ask for is a chance to show what we can do.”

Jeff Pool, the commissioner for the Illinois Rehabilitation Services Agency, notes that the law by which the federal government purchases goods and services from people with disabilities has created millions of dollars of revenue for the state and has helped close a funding gap previously created by state budget cuts. The program ensures that the state has a ready supply of qualified workers.

“I think that people are more willing to pay for that services,” he says, “because they see that it is good for society. At the same time, procurement is done with an eye toward getting it done at a cost-effective manner.”

Tommy Williams, who is deafblind but serves as a “listen” interpreter for the AbilityOne Commission, was able to get his first job at AbilityOne when he was a student at the National Technical Institute for the Deaf in Rochester, New York. He now serves as a consultant to the commission, helping it to understand the unique challenges that people with dual or multiple disabilities face.

Williams says that the most important thing is for people with disabilities to be treated like normal people. “We need to be able to look and the society will say ‘look, I’m worth something. What can I do?’ ” he says. “That’s the key. It could be a disability. It could be anything. Just get the opportunity to do.”

Karen McCulloh (BS ’94)

McCulloh pursued a career as a registered nurse, but was unable to secure employment as a healthcare professional upon becoming visually impaired. She returned to Loyola and created her own specialty in nursing, Community Health Disability Education. She co-founded the National Organization of Nurses with Disabilities in 2003. Since that time, the organization has established an alliance with the U.S. Dept. of Labor Office of Disability Employment Policy in order to open up healthcare careers and work in the industry to people with disabilities.

McCulloh was also the founding executive director of disabilityworks, an initiative started by Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley in 2005 to break down the employment barriers that keep people with disabilities from obtaining jobs.

James Omvig (JD ’66)

Omvig, who was to his knowledge the first totally blind person to be accepted at Loyola’s law school, has held leadership posts with blindness organizations, such as the National Federation of the Blind, all over the country. In addition to a distinguished legal career in which he served as the first blind attorney employed by the National Labor Relations Board, Omvig was contracted by the U.S. Department of Education to write a book about how best to train and rehabilitate people who are blind or visually impaired. He has spent his career fighting for the civil rights of individuals who are blind.
There are no children playing outside in the Austin neighborhood surrounding Spencer Elementary Technology Academy. Located on the city’s West Side, and with one of the highest homicide rates in Chicago, Austin is simply too dangerous for that. Spencer principal Shawn Jackson (PhD ’10) has taken it upon himself to provide opportunities within the school walls. And students aren’t the only ones who are benefiting. Jackson has found ways to meet the needs of their parents, which has given his students a better chance to succeed.

Jackson “exudes a sense of mission,” according to Janis Fine, PhD, graduate program director of Loyola’s Administration and Supervision program. “It’s one thing when other people believe in you, but he works with them in such a way that they come to believe in themselves.”

Jackson began by forging a stronger connection with parents. The school opened its computer labs to parents, partnering with City Colleges of Chicago so they can take courses, prepare for the GED test, and learn computer skills. They also work on resumes and search for employment. In addition to providing services for them, Jackson welcomed parents into the building as volunteers called Parent Scholars.

Jackson also applied for a grant to enable Spencer to become one of a handful of technology academies in the CPS system. These schools, located in struggling areas, infuse technology into instruction and curriculum. Many students don’t have computers at home, and the local library only has five. Now, at Spencer, there are seven computer labs.

Jackson says he has “begged and borrowed” to set up the labs, getting used equipment and grants from companies, organizations, and universities.

Spencer also has a gymnasium full of Nintendo Wii’s, where students can play. “There’s no playing outside, and there’s no bowling alley or skating rink in Austin,” Jackson says. “So we made it our obligation to provide those opportunities in the building.”

Jackson credits the teachers with helping set Spencer on a new course. He describes himself as a hands-off leader and believes his job is to articulate where the school needs to go, provide resources to support the teachers, monitor progress, set goals, and provide motivation.

Since he took over at Spencer, Jackson has set incremental and realistic goals. “To motivate the organization to move forward, we all had to believe it was possible,” Jackson says. The school still has not met the federal target, but he believes that will come in good time.

For now, Jackson measures success based on individual student growth and whether students are learning the skills to succeed in a global society. He also measures teacher growth as a part of Spencer’s progress, encouraging them to pursue master’s and doctorate degrees. But the most important way to gauge whether Spencer is moving forward, according to Jackson, is to walk down the halls and witness the way students feel about their school and themselves. “It used to be that they wouldn’t look you in the face. Now they can’t stop talking,” he says with a smile.

Jackson says students have more confidence in their abilities, and the entire school community—from parents to staff to students—is no longer willing to accept failure. This, he says, is the accomplishment of which he is most proud.
Shawn Jackson, principal at Spencer Elementary Technology Academy, works to give students the skills they need for success.
OUR BACK YARD

FINE AND PERFORMING ARTS

From the study to the stage

Adjunct professor Susan Felder’s play stars a former student

More than two years ago, Loyola adjunct professor Susan Felder gathered in a small Lake Shore Campus office with two students for a reading of her new play, Apocalypse Godot. The play, set in war-era Vietnam, told the story of two imprisoned young American soldiers. Raw, quickly written, and at only around 25 pages, it had no clear future.

That same play, renamed Wasteland, opened at Chicago’s renowned TimeLine Theatre Company in October 2012 and was hailed by the Tribune as “a superbly directed production…quite subtly written” and by Time Out Chicago as “a harrowing and heartbreaking work.”

Felder and director William Brown aren’t the only ones receiving rave reviews. The play’s star, Nate Burger (BA ’10), a Loyola alumnus and the same student who took part in the first reading of the play in Felder’s office, has been praised as a “beautifully authentic” and “vulnerable” performer.

Loyola’s theatre department approved the project for a workshop production, but getting it off the ground proved to be difficult. “They couldn’t put it in the regular season,” Felder says. “Things got a little crazy, and there weren’t any actors available. I went home with every intention of not doing it.”

It was her students that kept the project alive. “They just went commando on me. They said: ‘We’re doing this,’” Felder says. But that’s the lovely thing about Loyola students—they have a lot of ownership.

A student-produced workshop of the play (not involving Burger) was performed last November in one of Loyola’s black-box studios. While not a full-fledged production, it piqued interest in the piece. Felder showed the script to friend and director William Brown, who encouraged TimeLine’s artistic director, PJ Powers, to take a look at it.

Though TimeLine’s season was already mostly planned, the company was so impressed by Burger’s reading of the play that they hastily added it to the season.

Burger plays Joe, whom he describes as a “stand-in modern liberal who is a closeted homosexual.” On the other side of the prison wall (hidden from the audience) is Riley, played by Steve Haggard, a Southern man whose conservative views clash with Joe’s. The two must come... to terms with their isolation and the fact that they only have each other. The friction between the two is strikingly relevant to the present-day audience in today’s polarizing political climate.

But Wasteland is less about politics and more about coexisting.

“I’m tired of liberal plays that preach to the liberal people that come to the theatre,” Felder says. “We need to look at both sides of the issue, and we’ve stopped doing that in this country.”

Though she admittedly found it difficult at times, Felder wanted to explore the minds of those with different beliefs than her own.

“You need to listen and respond. You have to say: ‘You’re right’ sometimes, or it’s not a conversation,” Burger says. The play also deals with the common experience of isolation that is, in Joe and Steve’s case, very literal.

“We’re not supposed to share our isolation and I think that’s so perverse. I wanted to shed a light on human isolation, and what it does to our hearts and how we respond to it. All we really need is someone on our side,” says Felder.

“The play itself could be about any war. It’s about these two guys who are separated by this physical wall and have put up all these emotional barriers as well,” Burger says.

Preparation for such a challenging role wasn’t easy, but Burger says that his time at Loyola helped him hone the skills to do so.

“Because it’s a liberal arts program, you get that grounding in all aspects of the process—it makes it so much easier to know what everyone needs to get accomplished in the room. You know when to get out of the way and when to get involved.”

His relationship to Felder, who remained heavily involved throughout the production process (which entailed several extensive rewrites), also made the process easier.

“I love working with Nate. Quite frankly, he’s extraordinary in my play, and that’s not an easy thing. I knew that he was the kind of actor who would bring his heart to it,” Felder says.

Burger advises other aspiring actors to take advantage of the local arts scene. “Utilize your contacts, go see plays, go see what’s being done,” he says. “Get a feel for the scene and what people are finding engaging and exciting, and see what works for you.”

Illuminated by hand

Loyola has acquired an edition of the Saint John’s Bible, the only handwritten and illuminated Bible since the advent of the printing press more than 500 years ago. It was written and drawn entirely by hand using quills and paints hand-ground from precious minerals and stones. There will be a volume placed at each of the three campuses, including one currently on display at the new School of Nursing building.

The Saint John’s Bible was a 15-year collaboration of Scripture scholars and theologians from Saint John’s Abbey & University in Minnesota and a team of artists and calligraphers at the scriptorium in Wales in the United Kingdom. The University’s Heritage Edition is a fine-art reproduction of the original manuscript and one of only 299 sets created. The University acquired this limited edition through the generosity of the Jesuit Community of Loyola University Chicago and its donors.

CENTER FOR THE HUMAN RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

Human trafficking conference

On September 10, Loyola hosted an interdisciplinary conference to bring awareness to the problem of child trafficking in the U.S. The program was sponsored by Loyola’s Center for the Human Rights of Children, in collaboration with the Civitas ChildLaw Center and Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology. Laurel Bellows (JD ’74), a top Chicago litigator and the current president of the American Bar Association, delivered the keynote address. Speakers included alumna Hon. Virginia Kendall (JD ’92), judge for the Northern District of Illinois; Katherine Kaufka Walts, director of the Center for the Human Rights of Children; and Dr. Deborah Baskin, professor and chair of Loyola’s Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology.

What experiences do you have that led you to become the director of TBC?

I arrived in China in 1988, working in Hong Kong as an engineer. I discovered a very fascinating culture, especially in the local Catholic Church in South China. I decided that I felt the calling to become a priest and to work as a Jesuit in China. I went back to France to do my studies in philosophy and theology. While I was in France, I studied Chinese language and culture. In 1997, I went to Taiwan for one year to study intensive Chinese.

I arrived in Beijing in August of 1998, with the first batch of students at TBC. Of course we were only 10 people at the time, but, for me, that program was very important, because I could continue to study the Chinese language, and I took classes that had a very strong impact on me, like a class on Chinese philosophy. The class was taught by the chair of the department at Peking University. It was a chance to get deeper into the understanding of Chinese culture and history.

What attracted you to China?

I have been in China for more than 20 years and have made it my permanent home. I was initially attracted by the long history and culture of China, by its ancient texts. I slowly discovered how Chinese culture is alive today amid deep transformations. Some Chinese people feel pessimistic about the survival of Chinese culture. Culture, however, is not a rigid reality but always changing. I really believe that the economic success of China will be followed by a renewal of the Chinese culture, transformed in a new ways and in further dialogue with the other great traditions of the world.

Was it difficult to adapt to life in China?

When I first came to China, I faced many challenges in terms of language and barriers. In the 1980s some Chinese people would feel the presence of a foreigner odd, or even dangerous. When I started teaching in my department, some of my colleagues could find my presence disturbing. In China, it takes time to form personal bonds with people, to develop relations which are mutually beneficial. China is a school of patience.

Where is your favorite place to travel?

Of course I am personally attached to Beijing. I lived there during my studies and developed many connections. As a Jesuit, Beijing is also an important place. Matteo Ricci [the first Jesuit to begin a ministry in China] realized very soon that the Jesuits should get acceptance in the capital in order to be allowed to work in the other parts of the country. Ricci arrived in Beijing in 1601 and since then, Jesuits have maintained a strong presence. There are many places in Beijing related to the Jesuits and I myself wrote a guide book on the subject (Following the Footsteps of the Jesuits in Beijing). Today you can still visit three churches built by the Jesuits, two Jesuit cemeteries, and the astronomical observatory where they worked for more than 200 years.

Learning about China and Chinese history/culture is essential because of its growing influence on the world. What skills and experiences at TBC give its students an advantage in that aspect?

Today, understanding China is not anymore a matter of choice but a necessity, an absolute priority. Our future is going to be impacted and shaped by China. There is a great probability that Loyola students will be working in America for a Chinese company, or they will go to China and work there for a Chinese or a Western company. The ability to speak Chinese language, to understand with some depth the culture and society, to have Chinese friends—all these are skills and experiences that you gain at TBC that will prove vital in the future.

The John Felice Rome Center celebrated its 50th anniversary with Cinquanta! the weekend of September 28–30. The highlight of the weekend was La Festa, held Saturday evening at Chicago’s Union Station. The party, welcomed by JFRC Director Emilio Iodice, included a three-course dinner followed by a night of dancing and cocktails. Approximately 800 guests attended, including special guests Michael Garanzini, S.J., and Kate Felice. A raffle of Italian-themed prizes was held, including Fiat of Chicago’s exciting donation of a brand new Fiat 500. Proceeds benefited the Insieme per il futuro (Together for the future) campaign to raise funds for the JFRC.

Attendees were also given copies of the commemorative book Fifty Years of the Rome Center, a collection of photographs, letters, and postcards submitted by almost 100 JFRC alumni.

- Materials submitted can be viewed at LUC.edu/romearchives.
- If you missed the event but would like a copy of the commemorative book, a limited number of complimentary copies are available. Please contact Loretta Namovic at jfrcannounce@LUC.edu.
The writer Langston Hughes is probably best known for his poetry within the Harlem Renaissance of the '20s and '30s, but his body of work and literary legacy extend far beyond his famous “jazz poems”—he also wrote essays, novels, and plays, and was a social activist. In his new book, Which Sin to Bear? Authenticity and Compromise in Langston Hughes, English professor David Chinitz, PhD, investigates, among other things, the complex ideas about compromise that thread throughout Hughes’s life and work.

“Basically it’s a book about the dilemmas that Hughes faced at a time when it was very hard to make a living as an African American writer, and how he worked through them—both artistic concerns and problems of personal identity,” says Chinitz. Hughes wrote a number of poems and essays on the subject of compromise, and, according to Chinitz, Hughes generally seems to be resistant to it. But in examining the facts of Hughes’s life and work, the truth is somewhat more complicated.

Chinitz cites a dilemma Hughes faced in the 1950s while writing a book for children about famous black musicians. According to Chinitz, Hughes would presumably have liked to include a feature on Paul Robeson, who was a successful singer and actor. Robeson, however, had Communist leanings and had been interrogated by the House Un-American Activities Committee, and so, despite Robeson’s significant contributions to black music, Hughes left him out of the book. This compromise, although criticized by writer and civil rights leader W.E.B. Du Bois, would have seemed necessary to Hughes, Chinitz says.

“Hughes was a very private person—he never published a defense of his decisions,” says Chinitz. “So I look at his writings surrounding a decision like that and try to understand the rationale. His denunciations of compromise sound decided, and yet what was going on in his life and career doesn’t always square.”
The man in the mirror?

Most men don’t behave the way they’re portrayed in advertisements (for which we may all be grateful). In fact, according to Linda Tuncay Zayer of the Quinlan School of Business, some men will actually avoid ads that depict them in an unrealistic light.

Zayer, a professor of marketing, co-authored the research with her colleague, Cele Otnes, at the University of Illinois. What Zayer and Otnes found was that some men are offended by the hypermasculine stereotypes portrayed in certain ads and that the ads can leave them feeling inadequate or vulnerable. So much so, Zayer says, that they might turn the page or ignore the ad altogether.

“Men are multi-faceted and fulfill lots of different roles,” she says. “So let’s see them in lots of different roles.”

Loyola welcomes two endowed chairs

Professor James Gathii holds the Wing-Tat Lee Chair in International Law. His research interests include public and economic international law, and third-world governance and legal reform issues. Professor Elliott Gorn holds the Joseph A. Gagliano Chair in American Urban History. His research interests include 19th- and 20th-century popular culture, sports, and labor issues.
PLAYTIME

MEN’S TRACK AND FIELD

Through thick and thin

Teammates and rivals, 15 years and running

It was a friendship forged along the icy banks of Lake Como in St. Paul, Minnesota. Ned Brady and Danny Docherty would awake at 7 a.m. on winter Saturdays to run around the lake as part of a travel team soccer drill. Racing around the frozen lake in opposite directions, sometimes up to three times, and all while dribbling a soccer ball, they would routinely arrive near the finish line at the same time and make a mad dash for the close. “It was always neck-and-neck, and depending on who won, the other guy would be mad,” Brady recalls.

There would be other competitions, first on the soccer field, and later on the running track. Brady and Docherty have played on the same team, or competed against each other, since they were 8 years old. These days, they’re teammates, not competitors: both are on the track and field team.

“We’ve just always been together. Kind of like brothers,” Docherty says.

Brady, 23, a senior theoretical physics and applied mathematics major, runs middle distances: the 400m and 800m, and the 4 x 4 relay. Docherty, 23, a senior English and psychology major, is a distance runner, with races of 1 mile or longer. They have performed well in their individual events.

Brady and Docherty were both outside midfielders, on their 8-year-old soccer team, competing during practices, but playing together on opposite wings during games. They continued to play together on travel teams through high school. As they grew older, they realized their true talents revolved around running. They became stars on their respective high school track teams, competing against each other a couple of times in relays. Both recall the races being close, with Brady eking out narrowing victories.

Their decisions to attend Loyola were made independently, but they chose the University for the same reasons: they liked Chicago, they liked the coach, and they liked the potential for the track and field team.

“We talked about our choices as we narrowed down our schools, but it was just a coincidence that we both ended up at Loyola,” Docherty says. “But when I found out we were both going to Loyola, I thought, ‘Wow. That’s cool.’”

While their friendship is low-key, Brady and Docherty say they appreciate having each other there for support. “Danny’s been there with me, and seen it all,” Brady says. “He’s seen all the struggles and triumphs along the way. He’s shared all the highs and lows.”
WOMEN’S VOLLEYBALL

One last shot
(or spike)

Volleyballer returns for last year of eligibility after a year in the workforce

There were moments while Anna Eytchison was on the volleyball court that she flashed back to her times in the working world. These included a six-month marketing internship, a pair of waitressing jobs, and a short stint at an outfit called Budget Dumpster, all in Cleveland.

Eytchison says that moving from job to job made her appreciate being back in college and getting one more shot at playing Division I volleyball.

“Those experiences in the working world made me grow as a person. But I’m so happy to be back in school and getting to play another year of volleyball,” Eytchison says.

Eytchison, 22, is enrolled in Loyola’s MBA program, allowing her to be an outside hitter on the Rambler team for the 2012 season.

The opportunity was the result of her graduating early from the University of Dayton and having one more year of eligibility as an amateur athlete. But it took a year, and the series of jobs, before she realized she wanted to come back and play.

“After my third season at Dayton, I was ready to graduate, get a job, and move on,” says Eytchison, who earned a bachelor’s degree in public relations in 2011. “But I realized I missed volleyball, and was looking to get back.”

She was a bit apprehensive when she started sending out feelers, because she wasn’t confident she could still play.

“I hadn’t played in a year and I didn’t feel like I was any good. I thought the coaches would think I was all washed up,” she says.

But Loyola coach Chris Muscat was eager to talk to Eytchison.

“We have a lot of young players, so I felt Anna, having played for a top 25 program, could be one of our leaders,” Muscat says.

SPORTS SHORTS

LOYOLA TO HOST NCAA CHAMPIONSHIP

Loyola will host the NCAA Men’s Volleyball Final Four on May 1 and 3, 2014. This is the first time Loyola has hosted a NCAA Championship in any sport. Since the program was founded in 1996, the Ramblers have posted eight 20-win seasons and thrice (2002, 2005, and 2006) have claimed at least a share of the MIVA regular-season title.

A CLEAN SWEEP FOR CROSS COUNTRY

For the first time in program history, the Loyola men’s and women’s cross country teams completed a clean sweep of all four titles, both team and individual, at the Horizon League Championships on October 27 in Kenosha, Wisconsin. Sophomore Sam Penzenstadler earned medalist honors in the men’s 8K with a time of 24:59 to help propel the men’s side to their first title since 2001 and first outright title since 1997. Senior Gina Valgoi won the women’s 5K race with a time of 17:05. She becomes Loyola’s first individual champion on the women’s side since Kristyne McGuinn in 2001.

SOFTBALL TEAM HONORED FOR ACADEMIC SUCCESS

Loyola’s softball team was recognized by the National Fastpitch Coaches Association (NFCA) for having a team grade-point average of 3.35 during the 2011-12 academic year. That mark places Loyola at No. 32 in the nation. “I could not be more proud of how this team strives for excellence in all that it does, both athletically and academically,” says head coach Missy Beseres.

John Ostrander • BA ’71 • Comic Book Writer

Since 1983, John Ostrander has written comic books for DC and Marvel Comics, among others. His comic books include the creator-owned GrimJack—a “hardboiled barbarian”—Legends (with Superman, Batman, and Wonder Woman), X-Men, and Wolverine. He has also penned numerous Star Wars tales for Dark Horse Comics.

Give as good as you get • I was a great reader and wanted to give back some of the pleasure I got—and still get—from reading. Knowing my interest in comics and having co-founded First Comics, my friend Mike Gold wanted to see what I could do with the medium. He gave me a shot and paid me to do it. The ability to make money at something you love should never be discounted as a strong motivator.

Recasting Batgirl • In Batman: The Killing Joke, the Joker cripples Barbara Gordon, alias Batgirl. Ostrander and his late wife, Kimberly Yale, reinvented Batgirl as a new character, Oracle, a computer expert and information broker. This move received praise from both fans and organizations involving the disabled.

To be honest, we felt that Batgirl was treated badly and discarded. So we reinvented her as Oracle. We wanted to show that, even bound to a wheelchair, Barbara was still a hero.

How much input does George Lucas have when you’re writing Star Wars comics? • I write an overview of a given arc and that goes into Lucasfilm Licensing for approval. They say “yes” or “no,” send notes, and then I write a full script, which also needs approval. I’m told (Lucas) reads the comics but I never had any direct contact with him myself.

Art and craft • There are some very good writers out there and I just try to keep up. One thing I try to do is keep one foot in reality as I craft a fantasy. I want the reader to identify emotionally and psychologically with the story and the characters. I do a lot of outside reading and that always influences my work. I simply don’t know as I’m different from any other writer in that regard.

On fandom • I’m a fan before I’m a writer and I appreciate all the support and kind words fans have given me over the years. I will never take that for granted.

“The ability to make money at something you love should never be discounted as a strong motivator.”
A swing and a miss

When the Mundelein Center was first dedicated in 1931, only two of the building’s elevators were installed. Sister Mary Therese, BVM, a Mundelein College physics and botany teacher, made good use of one of the empty shafts by hanging a 120-foot Foucault pendulum from the ninth floor to the basement. At the time, it was the longest pendulum of its kind in existence. In 1938, the year this photo was taken, Time magazine ran a story on it. A Foucault pendulum is a simple device that proves that the earth rotates on its axis. It was used by Mundelein students, as well as outside science enthusiasts, for research and observation.
The new Los Lobos de Loyola statue at the Lake Shore Campus serves as a testament to Loyola’s Ignatian heritage.
Dear Loyolans,

I am pleased to share an update on this year’s progress at Loyola. Our total enrollment stands at 15,720, with first-year retention at 87 percent and a four-year graduation rate of 60 percent—a new high in both categories. Forty percent of our new undergraduates identify themselves as non-Caucasian. There is also geographic diversity with 40 percent of our freshman class coming from outside the state of Illinois. This fall, we hired 90 new faculty members—an extremely talented group of women and men who will help us meet our student-faculty ratio of 14:1 in the classroom. This year, Loyola moved up 13 spots in the U.S. News and World Report rankings to land at 106, reflecting a number of ways we continue to strengthen the academic quality at Loyola.

Increasing our international profile is a high priority in the coming years. Loyola now hosts programs in Beijing, Vietnam, and at the John Felice Rome Center, which celebrated its 50th anniversary this year. It is fitting that this program, which was one of the first of its kind in 1962, still leads the way in setting the bar for study-abroad experiences. The campaign for the John Felice Rome Center, Insieme per il futuro, also continues to make progress, and has now achieved 50 percent of its $12 million goal to renovate the campus. Our study-abroad programs, which are offered in over 50 countries, are indicative of the value we place on giving our students a global perspective with real-world experience.

Our home campuses also continue to develop and improve. Over the summer, we completed a beautiful new garden next to the Madonna della Strada Chapel. Designed to match the façade of Dumbach Hall and complete the original plan for the Lake Shore Campus, the new Cuneo Hall houses a number of our Centers of Excellence as well as classrooms and a four-story atrium, and the building’s energy-saving design has already earned it a Gold LEED certification. Next spring, we are looking forward to opening the Arnold J. Damen, S.J., Student Center on the location of the old Alumni Gym. This student union marks the third phase of Loyola’s reimagine campaign to revitalize student life on the Lake Shore Campus.

This fall, we completed the seven-year renovation of the Mundelein Center for the Fine and Performing Arts. The building, a national historic landmark, now houses state-of-the-art classrooms and performance spaces, including the Newhart Family Theatre, which we dedicated in September. Across Sheridan Road, construction continues on a new student residence, DiNobili Hall, and the Institute for Urban Environmental Sustainability. This institute will include a greenhouse, atrium, classrooms, labs, café, sustainable residence hall, and more. Building on years of innovation in academics, programming, and energy consumption, this facility is the next step in Loyola’s commitment to being a national leader in sustainability.

Another major priority for us is the development of our Health Sciences Division, which includes the schools of nursing and medicine. This fall, we cut the ribbon on the new Marcella Niehoff School of Nursing and Center for Collaborative Learning building, which features a six-bed virtual hospital and home-care simulated environment. Connected to the Stritch School of Medicine, this new facility was designed to foster collaboration between our nursing and medical students.

At Founders’ Dinner, I was thrilled to announce a milestone $40 million gift to the business school from alumnus and chairman of our Board of Trustees Michael R. Quinlan (PhB ’67, MBA ’70). In honor of this tremendous act of generosity, our School of Business Administration and Graduate...
School of Business will now be known as the Michael R. Quinlan School of Business.

We are thankful for your continued support of and commitment to Loyola. As you know, one of our most pressing areas of need is scholarship funding. As government aid declines and the cost of educating students climbs, scholarship resources are becoming more important than ever. That’s why we’ve launched Access to Excellence: The Campaign for Scholarships, which has already raised $27 million toward its $80 million goal for scholarship funds. Loyola has pledged $22 million to match certain gifts to this campaign, which creates naming opportunities at levels that are within reach for many donors. Please visit LUC.edu/scholarshipcampaign for more information.

In the fiscal year that ended June 30, 2012, the University continued its track record of strong financial performance and generated an operating surplus of $44.3 million and an overall increase in net assets of $74.9 million. As in recent years, the operating surplus was used to set aside funds for future debt repayments, establish various quasi-endowments, and fund certain capital expenditures. As part of its extensive six-year $750 million capital plan to significantly improve its facilities, the University issued approximately $315 million in new debt. Approximately $115 million was borrowed short-term in order to speed up and complete construction. It will be repaid over the next seven years. Our endowment now stands at over $400 million, its highest value ever, thanks to generous contributions from our donors and re-investment by the University.

Thank you for your continued partnership as we provide a transformative education in the Jesuit tradition.

Sincerely,

Michael J. Garanzini, S.J.
President and CEO
Loyola University Chicago
Ignatius Loyola was born in 1491 in Northern Spain. As the first General of the Society of Jesus, he composed thousands of letters to those following in his mission of educating youth, ministering to the sick, and serving the greatest needs of society. By 1773, his legacy had created more than 700 schools and 175 seminaries throughout the world. Today, millions of people from all corners of the globe are educated and have served in the Jesuit tradition that he established. Loyola referred to himself as a pilgrim, and he will forever be known for pioneering the vision for the Society of Jesus.

Ignatius Loyola, Francis Xavier, and Peter Faber were college friends whose vision, mission, and prayer were the compass that guided the Society of Jesus and shaped the proud tradition of Jesuit education and service. • The Founders’ Circle, Loyola University Chicago’s most prestigious giving society, honors the men and women who have made philanthropic gifts totaling more than $100,000 to our University. These men and women have helped to carry on the work of these Jesuit founders.

Francis Xavier, born in Spain in 1506, is considered the greatest missionary since the time of the Apostles. In just 10 years after joining Ignatius Loyola in creating the Society of Jesus, Xavier traveled to Italy, France, Spain, Portugal, India, Japan, and the Philippines to establish educational institutions rooted in the Jesuit mission. He embodied the youthful spirit and idealism of the Jesuit order.
Born in 1506, Peter Faber grew up as a shepherd in the French Alps. He was held in high esteem by his peers for his profound knowledge and gentle sanctity and was the first of the companions to be ordained a priest. He was known as a great listener and counselor, and he became an effective preacher and giver of the “Jesuit Spiritual Exercises.”

DAMN SOCIETY

Arnold Damen, S.J. (1815–90), for whom the Damen Society is named, helped establish Holy Family Church, Chicago’s first Jesuit parish. His vision of a church, school, and college on the city’s Near West Side led to St. Ignatius College, the predecessor to Loyola University Chicago. • The Damen Society recognizes alumni and friends who support Loyola with gifts of $1,000 or more.

This honor roll of donors is reflective of gifts made between July 1, 2011, and June 30, 2012.
For more than a century, the College of Arts and Sciences (CAS) has been preparing young men and women for fulfilling careers that benefit themselves and their communities. Dedicated to the Jesuit, Catholic ideal of cura personalis, or “care for the whole person,” CAS is devoted to providing every student with a strong foundation in the liberal arts. • The Pillar Society recognizes alumni and friends who support CAS with annual gifts of $1,000 or more.
EXECUTIVE SOCIETY QUINLAN SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

The Quinlan School of Business prepares undergraduate and graduate students with the skills, training, and values necessary to become ethical leaders in the global business world. Located in a city that is both a global economic leader and a central hub in the country, Quinlan provides students with opportunities to work, intern, and volunteer while studying. • The Executive Society recognizes those who support the Quinlan School of Business with annual gifts of $1,000 or more.

The School of Education (SOE) sees education as not just a profession, but a calling. The start of the 21st century marked 500 years of the SOE reaching back to its Jesuit roots in envisioning education as an opportunity to make the world a better place, with a focus on social justice, scholarship, and diversity. • The Honors Circle recognizes alumni and friends who support the SOE with annual gifts of $1,000 or more.

Fourth Estate Society
School of Communication

Referring to the three traditional ruling estates in British Parliament (the clergy, the land-owning ruling class, and the commoners), the “Fourth Estate” describes a social or political institution that is not formally recognized as such but wields considerable influence. The term is now used to describe the power and responsibility that the press and mass media possess. • The Fourth Estate Society recognizes donors who give $1,000 or more per year to the School of Communication.

A REMINDER OF WARMER, GREENER MONTHS • The new gardens and landscaping by Madonna della Strada Chapel replaced a rather less scenic parking lot. Although the winds are a little brisk these days, the gardens offer much-prized green space on the rocky shores of Lake Michigan.
