Dr. Jason Picard is a Modern Vietnamese History professor at the Vietnam Center.

He arrived in Vietnam in 1997 to work for a non-governmental agency. He was assigned to the province of Tây Ninh at the border of Cambodia, the first American given permission to live there since 1975. Since then, he has spent the last nineteen years living, working in, and studying Vietnam. In addition to Tây Ninh, Dr. Picard has also lived in Saigon/Ho Chi Minh City and Hanoi. He holds a PhD in History (specializing in Southeast Asia) from the University of California and has served as an interpreter for several newspapers and news agencies. He is currently translating a history of contemporary Vietnam as well as completing his manuscript.