Ngoc Thi Bich Tran, PhD, is a Researcher at the Institute for Research on Educational Development (IRED).

Her teaching and research interests include political and social history of modern Vietnam. Her dissertation explores the transformation of Vietnamese economy, society and culture under French colonialism, the national and international dimensions of the decolonization in Vietnam. Recently, her research has also focused on social and cultural changes in some areas of Southern Vietnam after the implementation of the Renovation policy.

Ngoc Thi Bich Tran has earned a Master’s degrees in Regional Studies - East Asia from Harvard University as well as both a Master’s and PhD in Comparative History from Brandeis University.