Ngoc Thi Bich Tran is a Researcher at the Institute for Research on Educational Development (IRED)

Her teaching and research interests include political and social history of modern Vietnam. Her dissertation explores the transformation of Vietnamese economy, society and culture under French colonialism, the national and international dimensions of the decolonization in Vietnam, and is based on research in archives in Vietnam, France, and the United States. Recently, her research has also focused on social and cultural changes in some areas of Southern Vietnam after the implementation of the Renovation policy.

Ngoc Thi Bich Tran has earned a Master’s Degree in Regional Studies- East Asia from Harvard University, as well as both a Master’s and PhD in Comparative History from Brandeis University.