A Special Option:
The M.A. in Theology with a Minor in Education from Loyola’s School of Education

The Theology Department is pleased to announce a Special Agreement with the School of Education:

Students in our Master of Theology Program May Now Choose to Include:
A Minor in Education from the Loyola School of Education!

This option is especially important for MA students who plan to teach Theology in High Schools and Academies. The School of Education has graciously agreed to offer a four course Minor to help prepare such students for their careers as Teachers of Theology.

Thus, beginning in Fall 2012, students seeking an MA in any of the Theology Programs – a) Biblical Studies; b) Biblical Languages and Literatures; c) Christian Ethics; or d) Theological Studies – can add the following four courses from the School of Education to their program:

- CIEP 414: Instructional Methods for Diverse Populations
- CIEP 423: Advanced Reading/Writing in the Content Areas
- CIEP 425: Classroom Assessment
- CIEP 458: Classroom Management

For those students who choose this option, the Theology Department will recognize two of these four required School of Education courses as fulfilling two electives in the MA program. The other two School of Education courses are added to the student’s program.

The program for students choosing the Minor in Education with a Master of Biblical Studies, Christian Ethics, or Theological Studies will be composed of twelve courses instead of ten (the ten required by the regular Master's program, and the two remaining courses from the School of Education).

Note: Since the Master in Biblical Languages and Literatures has no electives and is already twelve courses, those students who choose to add the Minor in Education will add all four courses to their program.
